Creating a Living Learning Center
Location: Meeting Room A

Jesse Kettermann, Jr.
Associate Director
Frostburg State University

Are you looking for a new program in your residence halls? What about three programs? For several years, Frostburg State University has successfully managed a leadership development program, a community service program, and wellness program. This year we combined them into one hall, a living-learning center. Stop by and find out how it has been working for us.

Linking Staff Selection and Training Processes: Did you Train on What you Learned from them During Selection?
Location: Meeting Room A

Bill Fox
Associate Director
Georgetown University

A view from the Hilltop: How Georgetown University residence life staff created practical training methods from what was learned by reviewing the responses of new hires during the interview and selection process. This type of information is especially valuable to new entry-level supervisors who want to get a real understanding of the expectations and needs of student staff.
